

MONETARY CONFERENCE.

D. Y. BANK ROBBERY.

Austrian Press Deems the Rothschild Scheme as Impracticable.
Numerous Schemes Proposed Which are Exciting Deep Interest.

LONDON, Dec. 1. The Standard's Vienna correspondent says the whole Austrian press, without exception, regards the Rothschild silver scheme as impracticable, believing it would increase the over production of silver, retard the creation of a fixed ratio, and leave the situation at the end of five years far worse than now. Austrian papers prefer the scheme of Julius Wolf, of Zurich, to expropriate mines, forbid the opening of new ones, and declare the production of silver a state monopoly.

Archbishop Walsh's Declarations.
BRUSSELS, Dec. 1. Delegates to the Monetary Conference are greatly interested in Archbishop Walsh's declaration in favor of bi-metallicism, the adoption of which he advocates as necessary to save the Irish tenantry from ruin. Sir G. I. Molesworth, an Irish landlord, approves the Archbishop's ideas.

NAPOLEON RELICS AT AUCTION.

Good Prices for Hair, Sockets and Other Things Used at St. Helena.

An interesting collection of works of antique art belonging to Robert H. Coleman, of Lebanon, Pa., was sold, Tuesday, at the Fifth Avenue auction rooms, in New York. The first briak competition was provoked by the offer of a stiletto which belonged to one of the Medici, and was made in 1540. This came from the San Donato sale, and brought $115.

The statuary did better. Barcaglia's marble group, "Capit Blinding Love," provoked a lively contest, and brought $600. A copy of the Venus de Medici sold for $225. A clock of the period of Louis XIV., in copper marqueterie on red tortoise shell, brought $560.

One of the curiosities of the collection was a kneeling cloth which belonged to the private apartment of Marie Antoinette. This came from the San Donato sale, and brought $130.

A large pair of Medici vases brought $1,000 each. A tankard in silver gilt of the year 1707 brought $235. A diamond bracelet, which belonged to the Queen of Westphalia, brought $205. A chandelier in cherry satin brought $220, and a rich altar cloth of silver wear for $330. A fine piece of Flemish tapestry of the 16th century was the occasion of a lively contest. It brought $1,050.

A table set used by Napoleon at St. Helena, consisting of silver spoon, knife, fork and coffee spoon, brought $230.

There were other relics of Napoleon, all from the San Donato sale. A gilt bronze fender, used in the Emperor's house at St. Helena, brought $300, and the gilt bronze stand, tongs and shovel belonging to it sold for $100. Two gilded chairs, magnificently upholstered, which had belonged to Napoleon, brought $305 each. A gilded settee, upholstered in garnet damask, brought $410.

The Cashier Gazes at a Levelled Revolver and Hands Over $2,700.

The Two Robbers Flee, with the Whole Village in Pursuit, and are Soon Captured.

Allentown, Monmouth County, N. J., whose population of 800 is made up largely of retired farmers and their families, was the scene of a bank robbery Wednesday, says a Tribune despatch. Its only financial institution is the Farmers' National Bank. George Vandenberg, the president; Elmer Hutchison, the cashier, and George B. Barnaby, the bookkeeper, constitute the whole working force of the bank. At one o'clock to-day President Vandenberg was absent. The bank is a small, plain brick structure on the main street of the village. Cashier Hutchison was at the teller's window counting money, and Barnaby was making entries in a book at an adjoining desk. Snowflakes were falling, and except for two young men, strangers, one short and thick-set and the other tall and heavy, the street was deserted. The two strangers entered the bank together and simultaneously presented revolvers at the heads of the cashier and bookkeeper.

"We've come for money," said the short man, addressing the cashier. "Hand over what you've got, quick, or we'll blow both your heads off."

A pile of money in bills and silver lay heaped on the desk before the cashier, who, fearing that he would be shot, picked up all the paper money, amounting to $2,700, and handed it through the window to the robber.

"Now turn around," said the robber, still pointing his revolver at the cashier. Hutchison obeyed the command, and, as he wheeled about, the bookkeeper also turned, in obedience to the command of the other robber. The fellow who had threatened the cashier stowed the pile of bills in his pockets. Then the cashier and bookkeeper were ordered to walk to the rear of the bank and face the wall. "You've got the money," said the cashier; "what else do you want?"

"I want you to do as I say," exclaimed the robber, "or I'll kill you."

Hutchison was looking straight at the muzzle of the revolver. There was a dangerous gleam in the robber's eye, and the cashier concluded that it would be wise to obey this command also. Accordingly he walked to the rear of the bank, followed by the bookkeeper. Both robbers now made a dash for the street, but had hardly reached the sidewalk, when Hutchison, seizing a revolver which lay in his desk, gave chase to them. The robbers ran toward the Pennsylvania railroad tracks. The cashier fired at them, and they both returned his shot, but all the balls went wide of the mark.

The tumult caused an instant gathering of the villagers, and many joined in the chase. Cashier Hutchison fired two more shots, but failed to hit either of the fugitives, and they would have escaped but for two farmhands who cut them off a quarter of a mile from the bank. In less than two minutes the robbers were surrounded by twenty men, and forced to surrender. They were promptly handcuffed and locked up. The stolen money was recovered. They gave their names as Frederick Smith and B. J. Morris, but refused any other information. At seven o'clock Saturday evening they were lodged in Freshold jail.

On Smith was found a card on which was written, "Woodstown Bank, November 30." From this it was concluded that the men had planned several robberies, of which that of the Allentown bank was to be the first.

THE PASADENA INVESTIGATION.

Charles de Lesseps Thinks We Want His Father's Dick

PARIS, Nov. 28. M. Loubet, as Premier, has written to the Pasadena Investigation Committee that there are no legal means of securing the provisional release of M. Drumont the imprisoned editor of La Libre Patrie, in order to hear his testimony.

M. Ricard has appeared before the committee, in the capacity of Minister of Justice, and has promised to place at their disposal all desired documents in the possession of the Government.

M. Frinca, examining magistrate, who testified before the committee today, gave the results of his inquiries. He mentioned no imputes as recipients of bribes. He said he had found no trace of a check for 500,000 francs on the bank of France, alleged to have been paid to the late M. Baube. It had been found that the canal company's advertising expenses were 84,000,000 francs, of which 21,000,000 francs had been distributed among newspapers.

M. Lamaszelle testified that Charles de Lesseps has told him that whenever fresh capital was raised large sums had to be expended in cancelling the press; that these charges, however, were less than six per cent on the issues; that the vouchers of the company were in the hands of liquidators, bankers and all kinds of influential people; that, for the most part, Hebrews offered to assist when new issues were announced, being "able to praise or decry, according to the sums received;" that there was nothing astonishing in the large profits of the canal contractors, considering climatic risks, and that a competent court had examined and approved all contracts except Eiffel's, which was cut down by 8,000,000 francs.

In concluding his testimony the witness said that Charles de Lesseps had accused detractors of the company of acting in the interests of Americans desiring to acquire possession of the canal, or with a view to damage Suez Canal interests. It is understood that the resignation of the Cabinet will not interfere with the sittings of the committee.

The Maine Grand Army.

In general orders 9, headquarters department of Maine, G. A. R., just issued, Commander Isaac Dyer refers to the recent gathering of 80,000 comrades of the order in Washington, publishes important votes of the national encampment, calls the attention of posts to the necessity of recruiting, and desires to impress upon them the advantages of a closer alliance with the Sons of Veterans, saying, "The helplessness of our 'sons' and our 'women's' corps' cannot be over-estimated." The order is a model of conciseness, convenience and arrangement has an index to subjects.

The Shock to Young Myer Greenberg Brought on Hemorrhage of the Lungs.

Myer Greenberg, ten years old and delicate, went to the dentistry shop of Samuel Randel, No. 329 Grand street, New York, at ten A. M., Tuesday, to have a tooth extracted. Half an hour later he was dead. He bled to death in the dentist's chair. The boy exhibited no nervousness when he seated himself in the operating chair. When Mr. Randel pulled out the ailing tooth a torrent of blood gushed from the boy's mouth. At first the dentist supposed that he had broken a blood vessel, but when the flow continued unabated he became frightened and sent messengers for doctors.

Dr. Louis Morris, of No. 77 Orchard street, and Dr. William Dalton, of No. 124 Livingston street, came, but the boy was too near death for them to do any good. He died a few minutes after the doctors arrived. The boy, the chair and the floor about him were covered with his blood.

The messengers who called the doctors also notified Myer's parents, who live on the third floor of No. 107 Clinton street, that their son had been taken sick in Mr. Randel's place. The father and mother, accompanied by a score of sympathizing and excited neighbors, ran pell mell to the dentist's place, half a dozen blocks away.

They came too late, for the lad had been dead some minutes before they arrived. The relatives and friends of the dead boy filled Randel's spacious offices. Their lamentations attracted such a crowd on the street that policemen were called to drive them away. Mrs. Greenberg clasped her dead child to her breast and rocked herself in sorrow. Presently all but the mother forgot their grief, and with cries and imprecations rushed upon the dentist. They gave him a round hustling before he escaped to another part of the house.

The body of the dead boy was carried by the grief-stricken mother through the rain to their home on Clinton street. Their neighbors, who believed that Randel had by malpractice killed the boy, were for going around to punish him. A lot of them did go, but police on guard in front of the dentist's shop, prevented them from entering.

Myer Greenberg died from hemorrhage of the lungs and not from the gums, as was the common belief in that part of the town. His lungs had been ailing for several months. Ten days he had a slight hemorrhage. It is believed that the shock caused by the drawing of the tooth started the discharge from his lungs, which caused death. Randel said there was nothing in the boy's appearance to indicate that his lungs were weak. He says that had he suspected they were he would have refused to draw the tooth until the boy's lungs had been examined by a doctor.

CHILDREN CRY FOR PITCHER'S CASTORIA

"I am convinced of the merit of Hood's Sarsaparilla, after having taken but a few doses—this is what many people say."

THE ADVERTISING.

Of Hood's Sarsaparilla is always within the bounds of reason because it is true, it always appeals to the sober, common sense of thinking people because it is true, and it is always fully substantiated by endorsements which, in the financial world would be accepted without a moment's hesitation.

For a general family cathartic we confidently recommend Hood's Pills.

His personality filled the place. Yet not because he was a fat man. It was his annoying cough. He cured it with Adamson's Botanic Cough Balm and sank into haplessness and obscurity.
